Jean Lorrhah

Blood Will Tell

What they're saying:

"in Jean Lorrhah's intricate, surprising novel blood does tell – but what it has to say will astonish you. Just when you think you see where she's going, she'll show you something genuinely unexpected, genuinely original, that gives the struggles her heroine endures a depth of romantic poignance seldom encountered in the literature.

Delightfully original in concept, deeply romantic in execution – three cheers (and a Bloody Mary toast) for Blood Will Tell.

Susan R. Matthews 1998 Philip K. Dick Award; Nominee, 1998, 1999 John Campbell Award; Nominee—Best New SF Writer

"an intriguing blend of police procedural, science fiction, and romance...comparable to the vampire mysteries of P. N. Elrod and Tanya Huff, this novel is a must-read for the discriminating fan." Margaret L. Carter, Author, The Vampire in Literature: A Critical Bibliography

"the best read I've had in several months.... When I finished it, I wandered around my house from stack to stack of books disconsolately looking for another book that good. There wasn't one. I wish every book on the stands was this satisfying, this exciting and profound. I love this book. It's right."

Jacqueline Lichtenberg, Author, Those of My Blood and Dushau, winner, Romantic Times Award for Best SF; creator of the Sime~Gen Universe.

Corpses Smiling Serenely

In the mundane world of small-town police work, the last thing anyone looks for is vampires

Brandy Mather is a small-town police detective looking for the connection between a series of deaths in which each corpse wears the same serene smile.

She enlists the aid of computer expert Dan Martin—but is he helping her to find the answer, or leading her away from it?

Even as she falls in love with Dan, Brandy learns more and more about his own dark secret.
